

THE LATEST TECHNOLOGY IN BODY SCULPTING

Scott J. Loessin, MD, FACS

Dianne* had wanted to have liposuction for several years. “But I just kept putting it off,” admits the 31-year-old accountant. “It seemed like there was always something else to be done. It was never about me.

“Then my next-door neighbor had some dramatic cosmetic work performed by Dr. Loessin.”

Scott J. Loessin, MD, FACS, is board certified by the American Board of Surgery and by the American Board of Plastic Surgery. He combines the training and experience of a skilled plastic surgeon with the eye of an artist and is known for his high standards of patient care and his artistry as a surgeon.

“My neighbor raved about Dr. Loessin and his excellent work,” remembers Dianne, “and watching her progress was just amazing. It was a phenomenal transformation.”

Dianne describes her own problem as a genetic predisposition to an accumulation of fat in her abdomen, hips, inner thighs, and flanks (also referred to as love handles).

“It was like I had a spare tire around my middle,” observes Dianne, “and my buttocks weren’t proportioned correctly. I could work out, diet, and do a million crunches, but nothing would change the proportion of my body. It’s hereditary; my mother has the same shaped buttocks.”

Dianne says that seeing the outstanding results her neighbor achieved with Dr. Loessin inspired her to schedule an appointment for herself. “Finally, it was all about me.”

Target areas

“My first consultation with Dr. Loessin was complimentary, so I really had nothing to lose,” says Dianne, “and as it turned out, it was a great experience. Dr. Loessin’s staff is wonderful; they are caring, gentle, kind and compassionate.

“And Dr. Loessin is truly a professional. There were parts of my body I thought needed sculpting, and he encouraged me not to do it. He assured me I would be pleased with less than I thought I needed.”

“During our initial consultation, I spent a lot of time talking with Dianne, discovering what she wanted to accomplish,” remembers Dr. Loessin. “I wanted her to feel as confident as I did that the procedures I proposed could meet her expectations.”

Dr. Loessin suggested a new technique for Dianne called Vaser LipoSelection.

“LipoSelection uses the latest technology to gently dissolve and remove fat cells,” educates Dr. Loessin. “With traditional liposuction, the physician inserts a cannula [small tube] and rapidly moves through the area, cutting the fat and suctioning it out. The process could be quite traumatic and result in injury to adjacent blood vessels, nerves, and muscular tendonous structures.

“LipoSelection, on the other hand, specifically targets or selects body fat with minimal impact on other body tissue. This new technique uses ultrasonic energy delivered by a very small probe that goes into the pocket of fat. The ultrasound energy bounces off vital collagen tissues, leaving them relatively intact. It dissolves the fat, liquefying it without cutting it. I can then gently suction out the liquefied fat. This allows the skin to retract easily after the procedure and minimizes the discomfort and bruising typically associated with traditional liposuction.”

According to Dr. Loessin, the LipoSelection procedure uses an instrument developed by Vaser. “They have the exclusive rights to the technology,” informs the doctor, “and the sound energy used for it is so gentle and specific that it was first used to dissolve brain tumors.”

Dr. Loessin is the only physician in East Central Florida permitted by Vaser to provide this LipoSelection technique.
